- 2062 Circa 1930s quilted panel, believed to be the work of a miner's wife, produced under the support scheme. NB: The Rural Industries Bureau Scheme to assist miners' wives in South Wales through a period of economic crisis. In 1928 the Scheme's aim was to establish home industries among the women of the stricken Welsh mining communities which could be developed for a wider market. Traditional quilting had been successfully used to the same ends in County Durham. A few quilters still worked in South Wales. When they were interviewed they explained that if they had better materials and a rate of pay that would allow them to spend more time on a quilt, they could produce something much better. The Bureau provided £30 for materials and wages and orders were given to the most promising quilters. The neediest women in the pit villages were provided with Durham quilts as samplers through the Women's Institute. Classes were organised in six centres in South Wales: Porth in the Rhondda, Aberdare, Blaina, Merthyr Tydfil, Abertridwr and Splott. The teacher for each class was a Welshwoman who had learned quilting the traditional way and knew the traditional Welsh patterns. The first commercial exhibition of their work was held at Miss Muriel Rose's The Little Gallery, off Sloane Street, London, in autumn 1928 and brought in many orders.
