NB: Sir Robert Blundell was the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate who ruled the book obscene in 1964, with mounted and loose related press cuttings and correspondence with Professor Desmond Curran, in which he notes... 'I doubt whether reading pornographic literature can usually be said to definitely corrupt and deprave; I think it depends so much upon the individual case; but I could well conceive that some young girls may be led into unfortunately paths by what is contained here....finally, Whatever else this book would do I cannot see much good, for I think the facts and oddities of life are better learnt about in a more objective manner in more scientifically orientated work. In general, it is a good thing people should have better sexual education, but I would not recommend this as the best way of giving it. This is the sort of book that I think might reasonably shock a lot of people, and attention should be paid to the views of people who are shocked by this sort of stuff and it is not reasonable to just dismiss them as reactionary squares...p.s. I cannot see myself that this book has any literary merit and I cannot conceive that it has any historical value.'
